

Sad Death of a Woman

A distressing case is reported in this village. On Monday Mrs. Foot was washing and appeared in her usual health. In the evening on a neighbour entering her cottage she found her lying unconscious beside a bed in an upstairs room. She had evidently had an apoplectic fit. A doctor was summoned and came, but his efforts were futile and the woman passed away. She had only been married a few months, and within a very short time after the wedding her husband, who is a thatcher, sustained an injury to his eye, and has since been an inmate of the Infirmary. Great sympathy is expressed with the bereaved husband.

Salisbury Times, Friday, 22 April 1898