	Whilst every effort and care has been taken to transcribe the Monumental Inscriptions from the gravestones and grave-markers at St James The Great, accurately, some of the inscriptions have become worn or weathered.
	The inscriptions offer a very small record of the history of the burials at the Church.
	In 1860 a stone coffin was discovered under the Church which contained a skull and other human bones, which were later dated and recorded 'as being no later than 12th Century and the burial of a wealthy land-owner'.
	Credit is given to Jean Morrison and her recording of the now illegible transcriptions. This work is my own and as such, may be searched for free for research purposes, it may not be copied or distributed to be used for monetary gain by any third party without my express permission
	I would like to dedicate this work to the many souls who rest peacefully at the Church of St James The Great which is referred to in early documentation as the 'Chapel or Church of Littlestoke'
