Fragment of German beer mug from the Georgian period (life size)

Ella cleans and reads the stones in the path created by Revd Walter Asboe (1895-1965) in 1951

Nigel Pocock gives the story of Antiguan slave-girl Leonora at a local history day

An entirely new row of female child burials, a Girls' Choir Row, was discovered in 2009

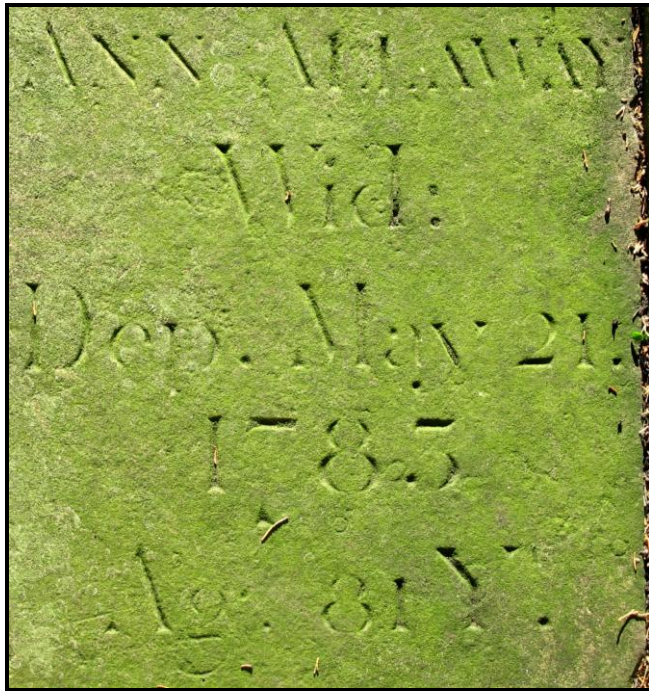

The Girls' choir row after restoration (2009)

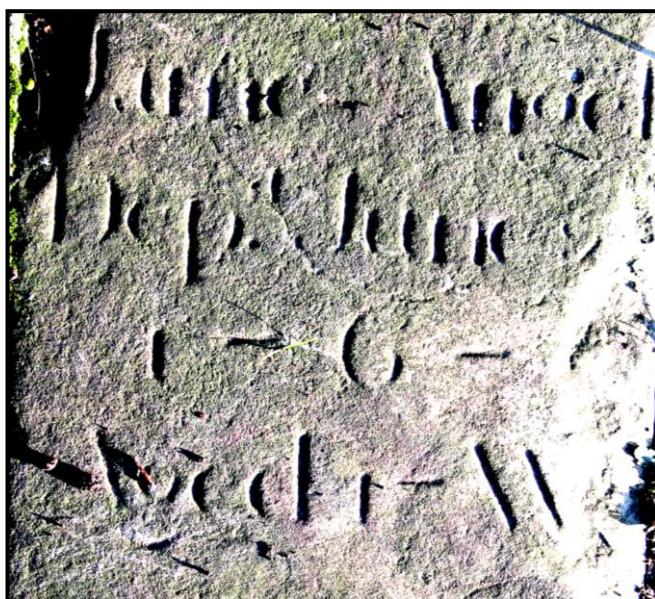

A very large Hartley's jam or marmalade pot may have held flowers, until a gravestone was laid.
Found under Henry Franklin's (d. 1912) gravestone in 2009.

A[[nna]] T[[heresia]] Okely
Depd. May 30

Aged 27 Ds. [[ays]]

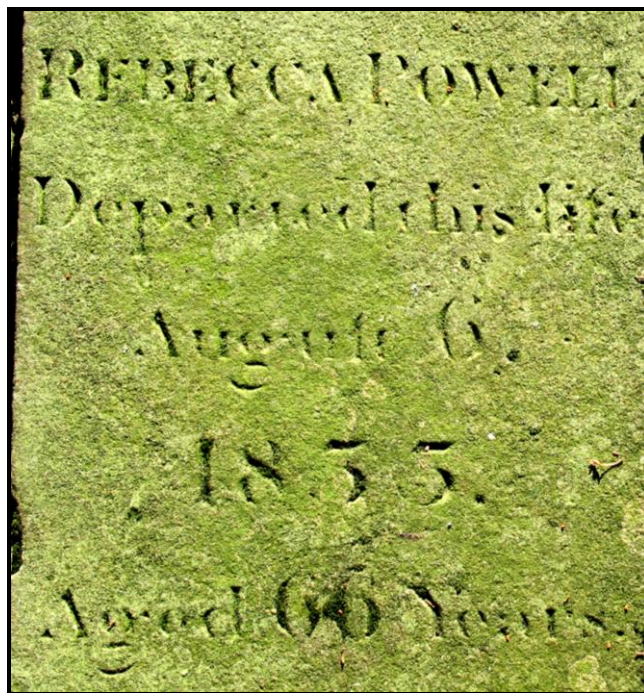

This absolutely pristine gravestone was found in exactly where the records show to be. It completely disagrees with the weathered stone now above it (taken from Revd. Asboe's 'path'), and it was evidently a 'mistake'. The Register has '1751' and aged '1 year', and this is presumably correct.; 'May 30th' would be too much of a coincidence for another child.
