

The Anzacs

Near Codford, where the Anzacs were stationed during the war, and from which they used to go into Bath and other neighbouring towns to spend their leave, the word "Australia" was cut into the hillside, but unfortunately the grass has been allowed very nearly to obliterate it. This is a pity, as, if it could be preserved in clean-cut outline, it would serve to remind people of the close link between Wiltshire downs and the brave sons of Australia, many of whom lie in the war cemeteries of France and elsewhere.
