Devizes Juvenile Provident Society Meeting

On Monday evening, about sixty Benefit Members of the "Devizes Juvenile Provident Society," drank tea, in the British School, and were afterwards addressed by Mr. G.W. Anstie, esq., in a very appropriate speech, containing several interesting anecdotes, showing the many advantages arising from the formation of provident habits in early life. The sight of so many youthful and happy countenances must have been exceedingly gratifying to Mr. Anstie, after his exertions in the establishment of so valuable an Institution, which assists the provident and industrious to secure a small fund in case of sickness or emergency. – The Society is open to young persons of all religious denominations, of good moral character, between twelve and twenty-one years of age, and who can be recommended by a subscriber. – At the conclusion it was announced that Miss S. Hughes and Mrs. G.W. Anstie would each give a reward of ten shillings to the two young women who had continued for the longest period in the same situation, retaining good character.
